

Student Service Learning in PGCPS

Presented by:

What is Service Learning?

Service-Learning is a teaching method that combines meaningful service to the community with curriculum-based learning. Students improve their academic skills by applying what they learn in school to the real world; they then reflect on their experience to reinforce the link between their service and their learning.

Why Service Learning?

Its important that young people learn the value of giving back to the community. Together- we can restore values that have been taught to us by our forefathers. Together we can make a difference in our community and in the world.

Dear Ms. Goldson,

Do you know what body dysmorphia disorder is? BDD, for short, is when a person is extremely insecure about their appearance. Victims constantly criticize their bodies, seek reassurance, and try to change their appearance; to the point where they develop other mental disorders like depression or anxiety. Around 4.8% of teenagers suffer from BDD. Now, while that may seem like a low amount, most teens who have this disorder don't get diagnosed and often suffer in silence. A combination of BDD and depression is part of the reason why 1 in 6 Maryland teens consider suicide. I have prompt two solutions to this issue:

- Mental health tip jars: A jar in the school counselors' office where students can express themselves without judgment.
- Promote professional help: Provide students with information about certified behavioral therapy or psychotherapy centers.

BDD is often misunderstood as having low-self esteem, or a normal stage of puberty. This disorder, Ms. Goldson, exceeds low-self esteem, people with this disorder sometimes imagine body imperfections. As stated earlier, BDD can lead to more serious mental disorders like social anxiety. My solutions will give students easy and accessible ways to receive help. Body dysmorphic disorder has no cure, but there are resources out there to prevent those who suffer from feeling completely helpless.
